There might be a leak in your heater control valve or one of the hoses back there. Let me tell you, its a * to get to those hoses and heater control valve. Make sure you get it checked soon. One of my heater hoses blew and I lost all the coolant. End result is BHG!

Heater Control Valve questions - The Acura Legend & Acura ...
My best guess is that the heater control valve is not opening, it could be the cable that controls it or the heater valve itself. When the car is up to normal temperature with the heater on full hot, fan on lowest setting, both heater hoses should be hot to the touch (about the same temp as the upper radiator hose) if one or both are not there is no coolant circulating through the heater core.
